

My Landlord Won't Make Repairs.

What Should I do? - HELP4TN Blog

If you live in Tennessee, and your landlord won't make repairs, what should you do?

Safe and Clean Housing

If the repair is for a necessity, such as heat, gas, lights, water, sewage, plumbing, or for something that makes your apartment unsafe or unhealthy, like bugs or rats, or rotten wood then you should let your landlord know in writing. They are required to fix it. Even if your landlord does not make these repairs, keep paying your rent.

Other Repairs

Don't forget to check your lease! Does it say who should make repairs? If your lease says your landlord must make repairs for the broken item, tell your landlord. For minor items in your home, if it doesn't say who should make repairs, you probably need to pay to repair it yourself.

How to Ask Your Landlord

Ask your landlord for the repair in writing, email, or text message and keep a copy for yourself. This form provides an easy, official way to ask for repairs.

What if the landlord won't fix it?

If it is the landlord's responsibility, you'll first need to ask your landlord for the repair in writing, for example. Write an email, letter, or text message that shows the date you asked for the repair. If your landlord doesn't repair the broken item for 2 weeks after you first told them, you can take steps to make them repair it.

You may be able to spend your own money to repair it yourself and then deduct that amount from your rent. DO NOT do this without the help of a lawyer.

You may be able to sue your landlord. This can pressure your landlord into repairing it or can get you money for your harms. Check with your nearest legal aid center first—you may qualify for a free lawyer.
